BOY TUMBLES TO

Peering Out of Wnidow at Girl's Whirling Body, Samuel Lillowitz Loses His Balance.

after seeing seven-year-old Paulina Weidman fall from the roof of the six-story building across the street. Samuel was instantly killed; the little girl is little injured.

Because of the crowded condition of the street, little Pauline, also seven years old, and six of her girl friends who live in the same building had gone to the roof to play. They were having a "ring around the rosy." "London Bridge is falling down," and other games dear to the heart of childhood. While one of these gemes was at its height, the children were attracted by a noise in the street. All rushed to the edge of the roof and looked over. Pauline, more curlous than the rest, leaned far over the edge, lost her balance, and fell.

Failing Child Lands On a Man.
She turned in the air once, and her body had assumed an upright position when her feet struck the railing of the fire-escape on the third floor. This threw her to one side and far out over the sidewalk. She struck a man and rolled into the gutter.

Cries of horror aross in the crowded street. Men looked on the little body lying in the gutter with white faces: women screamed and fainted. Before any could rush to the aid of the supposedly dead child, she arose, and without a tear, commenced brushing her clothes. She was uninjured except for two or three trivial bruises and a slight scalp wound. The man who acted as a buffer disappeared and it's not thought he could have been injured.

While Pauline and hor girl friends were playing, little Samuel Lillowitz not thought he could have been injured.

While Pauline and her girl friends were playing, little Samuel Lillowitz stood in the open window of his aunt's apartment, watching them.

Hey Tried to Warn Her.
He saw little Pauline lean over the edge of the roof and tried to warn her, following her with his eyes as she fell. He lost his balance and his body went hurtling through space. Unfortunately there were no fire escars or pedestrians to break his fall. He landed in the gutter. Dr. Cambell, of St. Catherine's Hospital, said death had been instant.

He put plaster on little Pauline's head and went away.

Since being discharged from that institution he has made his home here, receiving, it is said, an annuity from relatives in Richmond. Attorney Louis Wendenburg, of Richmond, has been engaged to defend him when his case comes to trial.

KILLED BY TRAIN

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
High Point, N. C., August 14.—Two children of this city met a horrible death this morning at Lake, twelve miles south of here. They were Vadie Cook, aged ten years, and Hazel Myers, aged six years. With their mothers, they had gone on a visit to the country. Seeing an approaching freight train, they stepped on another track, and fast train No. 44 swept down upon them from the rear, the mothers being helpless to render assistance. The children were badly mangled. A great crowd gathered at once and accompanied the remains to this city. The funerals of both will be held to-morrow.

Every man was at his post quickly. There was excellent discipline, and when it was found that the water at the start was making small headway, there was little to do but stand by. Every one of the boats was lowered away, and from the fruit steamer they could see their boats lowered away also. The small boats of the Leonidas were quickly on the scene.

"The water found its way from the magazine into the cargo hold," Becke sald, "and from that time it began to gain. The crew's quarters were flooded and they lost all of their effects."

New York, August 14.—Suicides in the United States are excessive and on the Increase, according to the figures for 1909, issued by The Spectator, 135 William Street. It estimates the number at 12,500 at least.

"The government vital statistics for the registration area, which includes about one-half of the whole population," The Spectator says, "return 8,322 suicides for 1908, or 18.5 per 100,000
of population. The registration area, however, includes all of the large cities, in which the suicide rate is higher than in the rural districts, although the difference in the rate is not as pronounced as is generally ashigher than in the rural districts, although the difference in the rate is not as pronounced as is generally assumed. Assuming that a rate of only 10 per 100,000 of population prevailed among the 41,845,000 of estimated population in the non-registration area (including a large negro population), the probable number of suicides in this area would be 4,185, which, in addition to the 8,332 in the registration area, gives a total of 12,517 suicides for the whole United States for, 1908."

Statistics show that poison is the favorite means for suicide, firearms a second choice, and hanging a third, according to The Spectator.

The method of suicide, the report says, "has an important bearing upon the subject in its larger aspects, for suicides are unquestionably, to a considerable extent, the resuit of suggestion. Granted convenient or easy facilities for said-myset the dead in facilities for self-murder, the deed is done before there has been time for reflection. It is nothing short of an indictment of our sense of community responsibility that facilities for sulcide should be as common as they are.

Regardless of efforts which have been rinde to suppress the sale of poisons and weapons, there is nothing easier case may be.

"In fact, an examination of the pistois or revolvers with which a very large number of suicides have been committed in Philadelphia, and which are on exhibition in the corbeen committed in Philadelphia, and which are on exhibition in the coroner's office, proves that most of the weapons are cheap affairs, probably bought in pawnshops for a few dollars, including the necessary small amount of ammunition.

"The general suicide rate in the registration area for this period was 14.0 per 100,000, and in detail, according to the several causes, was, per 100,000 of population:

Firearms
Hanging Asphyriation
Cutting
Drowning
Jumping from high places
Crushing

The suicide rate for sixty-five Amican cities during 1909 confirms conclusion of previous years that
